

Introducing Grant & Hisayo Bracefield

Grant grew up in Wellington where he was head boy at Rongotai College and at just nineteen, represented Wellington in senior rugby. University studies included accounting and then social sciences.

The adventure/travel bug took Grant to Europe, USA and Asia in his early twenties. It bit again in his early thirties when he went to USA, Canada, West Africa and then a seven year stay in Japan with Japan Airlines and his wife Hisayo, who had spent several years in Vienna studying and performing as a soprano.

In 1991 a new international-marketing position with Air New Zealand brought Grant & Hisayo and their two children back to Auckland. As the children grew Grant had less and less time with them as demands of the job grew, prompting him to leave and establish his own company in Taupo eleven years ago. Time flexibility was secured, but not financial security and true freedom.

Grant and Hisayo have been joined in ACN by their son Richard, a fourth year Law & Management student at Waikato University and recently by daughter Elaine, a second year Science student at Otago University. They all see the potential of ACN and see the great value of their connection with Japan and Asia.

With video phones and Asia looming Grant & Hisayo feel the adventure bug biting hard again. This time it will be in Grant's sixties, when he's really looking forward to spending time launching ACN in Asian countries. His vision is to enjoy financial/time freedom and dedication to work that can benefit many people in so many new countries.
