

Introducing Ian Barker

Wandering Australia as a renegade teenager Ian had an encounter that changed the course of his life. He became a Christian. Soon after this he stumbled across the novel idea that one should work to make a living. He found he didn't enjoy working for others, and promptly became self employed. He became expert at a number of building trades while also working with real estate and a few other odd enterprises. Employing around a dozen people, Ian was not enjoying the extra workload and problems that seemed to come with being an employer. Returning to New Zealand with his wonderful wife Lyn, and two special boys Ian continued working with what he knew. An internet business he started was going well and consuming most of his time when Lyn brought home a magazine about ACN. Sceptical but always interested in other business Ian gave it some attention, but had little interest because he knew one of his limitations was poor people skills. But the potential of the industry couldn't escape him and decided to build part time with ACN. Ian believes ACN is an amazing company. He also believes ACN is for everybody, not just for the potential of financial and time freedom but just as importantly for the incredible life skills that will be caught as people build their ACN business.
